Nepal: The Rough Road Ahead

With less than a fortnight left for the second Constituent Assembly (CA) elections, which are scheduled to be held on November 19, uncertainty looms large over their peaceful conduct and the framing of the Constitution. This has resulted in lack of enthusiasm from people towards participation in the elections. People across the country also question the legitimacy of the elections given the boycott of the CPN-Maoist led 33-agitating political parties and their demand for holding the elections under a legitimate government. The CPN-Maoist is the largest group amongst the 33-political parties with the support of around 90 former CA members. Earlier, although the CPN-Maoist had declared its intention not to indulge in violent activities while boycotting the polls, the CPN-Maoist cadres have in recent times, increased their attacks on the NC, UML and UCPN-Maoist since mid-October. In fact, the party has recently declared a nationwide general strike across the country in the last ten days (from November 11) of the elections.

There are mixed responses over the CPN-Maoist’s call for 10-day strike. The security agencies believe that the CPN-Maoist does not have potential to carry out massive attacks during the elections. It can prevent the candidates from campaigning and voters from casting their votes in their strongholds in Rukum and Rolpa districts and some areas of far-western districts. However, anticipating attacks during elections, security agencies have introduced a special security plan named "Operation Seal" in the mid-western region. Secondly, these areas are also equally influenced by the UCPN-Maoist. The UCPN (Maoist) has the potential to retaliate against the CPN-Maoist attacks. Therefore, the CPN-Maoist may succeed only in preventing voters and candidates from participating in the elections freely. Fourth, the CPN-Maoist is no more a rebel group. As a political party, it cannot not afford to indulge in violent activities. Last but not the least, there could be pressure from the international community on the CPN-Maoist for not obstructing the electoral process by adopting any violent means.

The second interpretation is that the CPN-Maoist will attack other party candidates and the elections may not be peaceful. The CPN-Maoist terror tactics will affect a large number of people adversely and they may not participate freely in the elections. In the post-election period, the party will continue to protest against the framing of the new constitution. Despite a three-tier security arrangement for the elections, people do not seem to have full faith on it. Some, in fact, are not ruling out cancellation of the elections at the last moment given large-scale violence before it.
Apart from the CPN-Maoist, the Federal Limbuwan Sate Council (FLSC) in the eastern region and illegal armed groups in the Terai region have been opposing the elections. The FLSC and the CPN-Maoist have already protested the holding of elections by organising strikes. Similarly, illegal armed groups in the Terai region have threatened to target Madhesi candidates.

Despite elaborate security arrangements, local administrations have failed to check violence across the country. Around 22 people are injured in 15 poll-related incidents, mostly targeted attacks by the cadres of the CPN-Maoist and armed groups operating in the Terai region since October 03. Given the increase in violent incidents and, security agencies have arrested a number of district level leaders of the CPN-Maoist as a precautionary measure to avoid further violent incidents during elections.

In response to the attacks of October 26 the UCPM-Moist directed all its committees to retaliate. It is widely believed that the CPN-Maoist was expecting a favourable response from the High Level Political Committee (HLPC) and the government over their two major demands. That could be the reason why the party did not obstruct the nomination process. With no response from the government and the HLPC until October 02, the party announced that the dialogue process with the HLPC had ended. The party decided to reach out the people in villages and discourage candidates from contesting the CA polls. The next day, clashes broke out between the UCPN (Maoist) CPN-Maoist, that opposed the polls, in Salyan district. Around a dozen cadres of the two sides were injured in the clashes.

Since the Nepal government and agitating parties are adamant on their respective positions on the election, there is the possibility of more violence occurring close to November 19 and even after. Significantly, the issue of federalism was one of the major and immediate factors for the dissolution of the 2008 CA in May 2012. Like 2008, this time also, federalism has dominated the election manifestos of various political parties. Given the differences in views on the issue, in the post-election period, the issue of federalism may delay the Constitution making process. The parties/groups opposing the polls will intensify their agitation and will demand the declaration of the November 19 elections as illegitimate. In the event of that happening, there are strong possibilities of ethnic conflicts erupting in Nepal due to further delay in the constitution making process.
PROFILE-I

The Federal Limbuwan State Council (FLSC), Nepal

The Federal Limbuwan State Council (FLSC) was constituted in 2005 with an objective to form a separate Limbuwan province based on history and ethnicity. It began its political campaigning for a separate Limbuwan state in December 2006. So far, the demand for a separate province has been militant in nature. Before the formation of the FLSC, the movement got moral support from the Maoists, with Sanjuhang Palungwa as its first president. After the end of the Maoist conflict, the Nepal government and representatives of the Federal Limbuwan State Council (FLSC) entered into a five point agreement on March 19, 2008 for the participation in the Constituent Assembly election of April 10.

The FLSC was divided into two groups in 2008. FLSC leader Kumar Lingden decided to contest the elections under the umbrella of the Federal Democratic National Forum (FDNF) and formed the FLSC (Kumar Lingden). Later, the FLSC (Sanjuhang Palungwa) was formed under Misekhang Thamsuhang. The FLSC got further divided while a number of cadres decided to establish the FLSC (Revolutionary). This group is much smaller than both FLSC (Palungwa) and FLSC (Lingden) and is often considered politically less sophisticated.

The FLSC, as a member of the 33-poll opposing parties, had opposed to the November 19 CA elections along with the CPN-Maoist. It argued that the government should first get consensus on federalism and remove the present Prime Minister, Khilraj Regmi from two constitutional positions. As part of anti-election programme, it opposed the voters’ registration process in Eastern Nepal in response to the reduction of seats as per proportional representation in the November 19 elections.

Kumar Lingden is Chairman of the FLSC and Kamalraj Nembang is the Joint Secretary of the FLSC. Dilendra Subba is President, Limbu Language Development Organisation. It has a student wing called Limbuwan Alliance, an alliance of six Limbuwan student organizations. The alliance comprises the Limbu Students’ Forum, the Federal Limbuwan Students’ Union, the Limbuwan Student Council, the Limbuwan Nepal Students’ Front, and Sunsari, the Federation of Nepal’s Indigenous and Ethnic Students.

The FLSC organizes kangaroo courts in maoist dominated areas for instant justice to the victims. A major source of revenue for the FLSC is extortion. Apart from that they receive local and foreign donations. Some media reports have indicated that the FLSC cadres are collecting donations forcibly from businessmen and government officials.

The FLSC gets support from the Limbuwan ethnic community, spread across nine eastern districts of Nepal. The movement has spread over nine eastern districts of Nepal - Taplejung, Panchthar, Ilam, Jahpa, Khotang, Morang, Dhankuta, Terathum, and Sunsari. The FLSC also gets support from the Dalit Upliftment District Coordination Committee, and the Nepal Federation of Indigenous Nationalities.
COUNTRY ROUND UP

BANGLADESH

The general shutdown became a common phenomenon in Bangladesh this month. The opposition parties used the tactics to put pressure on the government and the judiciary to protect their leaders from the 1971 war crimes trial. Activists of Jamaat-e-Islami (JeI) and Islami Chhatra Shibir (ICS) led a series of processions in Dhaka and other parts of the country demanding release of their leaders convicted in war crime cases or facing trials.

On the political front, there was no substantial progress on the issue of a caretaker government to supervise elections. Both the AL and BNP placed their proposals for the caretaker government. While the ruling AL offered an all-party caretaker government, the BNP-led 18-party alliance proposed a ‘non-party’ caretaker government with 10 former advisers selected from the 1996 and the 2001 caretaker governments.

With no substantial progress on this issue, as per the decision at the October rally by the BNP, the party and its allies participated in a series of meetings on the manner in which the anti-government protests are to be conducted. There were reports that while preparing for the October rally, two students were killed and three others were injured in a powerful explosion at Jamiatul Ulum Al Islamia Madrassah controlled by the Hefajat-e-Islam (HeI) at Lalkhan Bazar in Chittagong. Police seized three hand grenades, 18 bottles of acid and tools used in making bombs from the spot. Police also seized arms and explosive making material elsewhere in separate incidents.

Meanwhile, many parts of Bangladesh witnessed sporadic violence because of intra- and inter-party attacks. The situation aggravated further with opposition parties’ protests which began against the government in late October. Around nine people were dead and around hundred people injured by October 29.

Although both the leaders have expressed their willingness for dialogue, the possibilities of any agreement over the caretaker government before February 2014 are remote. The continuing political unrest in Bangladesh may be conducive for proliferation of radical Islamist groups there, who were dormant for quite some time.

INDIA

In India, Jammu and Kashmir witnessed an increase in terrorist attacks and cross-border firing between the Pakistani and the Indian Army. The Indian army successfully neutralised an unaccountable number of infiltration bids across the border and also fidayeen attacks. India’s army claimed that they killed seven militants out of 30 to 40 infiltrators, who had crossed the Control (LoC) in September, in Kashmir region. The region also witnessed protests and rallies funded and supported by Pakistan-based militant groups. The separatist groups with the support of Pakistan again tried to internationalize the J &K issue.

Barring Manipur, India’s northeast remained peaceful. Two people were killed in a series of bomb blasts near the chief minister’s house. The state also witnessed frequent strikes organised by various groups against the construction of the fence along the Manipur-Myanmar border. Apart from that, Corcom called for an 18-hour general strike to protest the "illegal" merger of Manipur to the Indian Union on October 15, 1949.

In central India, despite disclosure of Indian Mujahideen’s (IM) plans and linkages with other groups by arrested IM mastermind Yasin Bhatkal and Asadullah Akhtar, alias Haddi, security agencies failed to neutralise another subversive action of the IM in Bihar. Six people were killed and 66 injured in six serial bomb blasts near the venue of BJP prime ministerial candidate Narendra Modi’s rally in Patna minutes before he reached there to address it. An independent IM module, with around 18 IM activists, was reportedly involved in the attacks. IM’s long term goal is to uphold Sharia in India like the Mujahideen in Afghanistan and Somalia.

As India is gearing for Assembly elections in four states including Chhattisgarh, the Maoists may target members of the major political parties and security forces in their stronghold. The outfit has already ordered its armed squads to prepare the list of attack spots and persons to be targeted. The IM also continue to be active during public rallies by various political parties.

MALDIVES

The political crisis in Maldives continued despite the Supreme Court’s (SC) order for rescheduling of the first round of presidential elections on October 19. The country failed to hold the elections because of non-cooperation from the Maldivian police. The EC again rescheduled the election date for November 9, after the police forcibly brought a Supreme Court-ordered re-vote to a halt on October 19. Earlier, the court annulled the September 07 presidential elections pointing out irregularities in the voters’ lists and bogus voting during the last elections. Meanwhile, the MDP organised street rallies as a protest against the cancellation of October 19 elections. The protestors also demanded removal of the police commissioner and formation of a caretaker government headed by the Speaker. Police used coercive methods to drive out democratically organised rallies and arrested around 17 MDP members.

The present political crisis in Maldives may soon turn into a constitutional crisis after the end of the incumbent President’s tenure on November 02 and perhaps after the rescheduled presidential election in the second week of November. Anti-democratic forces with the support of the police and the judiciary will try their best to further delay the elections to prevent liberal democratic forces winning the elections.

Major Events

October 01: Acting Foreign Minister of Maldives Dr Mariyam Shakeela in her address to the UN General Assembly referred to “concerted efforts by external forces to prevent the emergence of an indigenous democratic system of governance in the Maldives [by] attempting to shape the outcome of, what is, an internal issue.” Interestingly, on October 02, President Mohammed Waheed Hassan vowed to reject any external attempts to intervene in the country’s affairs, which he argued could be avoided if the national interest was put first (Minivan News, October 02, 2013).

October 02: UN Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs Oscar Fernandez-Taranco briefed the Security Council on the situation in Maldives, following the suspension of the run-off elections, ongoing protests and the submission of a “letter of concern” signed by senior military officers to their leadership. The case was filed by the leader of the Jumhooree Party (JP) of Maldives, Gasim Ibrahim alleging serious irregularities in the first round of the presidential election. October 10: The Supreme Court opened at midnight to issue a ruling ordering the Election Commission (EC) to restart the entire election re-registration process. The court also ordered the EC to give candidates the choice whether to stay on the ballot paper or withdraw from the election, contrary to the EC’s previous announcement (Minivan News, October 11, 2013).

October 13: Jumhooree Party (JP) presidential candidate MP Gasim Ibrahim will individually contest the election rerun scheduled for October 19. JP Policy Secretary Mohamed Ajmal confirmed that talks between Gasim and President Dr Mohammed Waheed and MP Abdulla Yameen of the Progressive Party of Maldives (PPM) had failed to result in an agreement to form an election coalition (Minivan News, October 13, 2013).

NEPAL

In Nepal, candidates were busy filling nomination papers and campaigning for the November 19 elections. The number of poll-related violent incidents increased sharply as the CPN-Maoist tried to prevent candidates to campaign freely in their stronghold. In the Terai region, some armed groups also attacked the candidates during campaigning. Normal life was affected due to frequent general shutdowns organised by the Federal Limbuwan State Council (FLSC).

As the election date gets closer, there are possibilities of increase in poll-related violence in Nepal. PAKISTAN
TTP's attack on security forces across the country continued. The levels of casualties in these attacks were less compared to previous months. In fact, the number of attacks on civilians also came down possibly due to strong counter-insurgency operations and offer of peace talks from the government. In an interview to BBC, Pakistan Taliban leader Hakimullah Mehsud said the outfit is open to ‘serious talks’ with the government. The TTP denied that the government has not approached them formally. Although, the TTP responded to the peace talk offers by demanding that any ceasefire should include an end to drone attacks, it clarified that it would continue to target ‘America and its friends’.

There was a general perception that external forces were involved in the recent attacks on churches in Peshawar and also violence in Karachi. Despite deployment of Rangers, Karachi continued to witness sectarian violence. Around 14 persons were killed in two incidents.

The TTP will continue to target security forces and NATO allies in the coming days. The offer of peace talks may progress further with the government consulting the US on drone attacks.

SRI LANKA

Although Sri Lanka did not witness any major acts of political violence, Buddhist radical groups criticised the government for engaging the TNA in politics. The Bodu Bala Sena (BBS) threatened to mobilise people against the decision. Interestingly, the statement came while defence secretary, Gotabhaya Rajapaksa, stated that the chief minister of Northern Province has no power to issue orders to the police. Some reports earlier had indicated that the BBS enjoys Gotabhaya Rajapaksa’s sympathy. The BBS also said it would re-commence the agitation against the issuing of halal certificates in the country. Another Buddhist radical group Sihala Ravaya protested against Muslims for opening business establishments in Kurundugahahethmekma.

Sri Lanka may experience fresh communal unrest and tensions because of growing radical Buddhism.

PROFILE- II

Chasi Mulia Adivasi Sangh (CMAS), India

The Chasi Mulia Adivasi Sangh (CMAS) is an association of farmers, bonded labours and tribals, formed when Andhra Pradesh based Maoist leaders were taking shelter in Odisha due to security forces pursuing them in that state in 2006. Prior to that, available documents indicate that the CMAS was heavily influenced by Andhra Pradesh based Maoist peasants’ front organization, the Rythu Coolie Sangham (RCS). As part of the ‘united front’ programme, the CPI (Maoist) supported the tribal movement against illegal occupation of tribal land by non-tribals in the then undivided Koraput district. There were occasions when the CPI (Maoist) leaders had demanded release of arrested CMAS leaders. As a result, the CMAS is suspected to be a front organization of the CPI-Maoist outfit, which is responsible for 98 per cent of violence in eastern and central Indian states. Despite that, the CMAS is not yet declared illegal by Odisha or the Central government. It has a geographical spread of over three districts – Koraput, Malkanagiri and parts of Rayagada districts of Odisha.

The motto of the CMAS is “Jameen Mukti, Madha Mukti, Goti Mukti (Struggle for land, emancipation from alcoholism and bonded labour)”. Its leaders claim that the CMAS aims to create awareness among Adivasis about their rights.

Nachika Linga is president of the CMAS, presently underground. Other prominent leaders of the CMAS are Arjun Kendruka, Nachika Chamara, Wadeka Singana and Gananath Patra. The CMAS witnessed a vertical split in 2008. Kondagiri Paidama, then leader of the CMAS, was sidelined by Arjun Kendruka and Nachika Linga. Later, differences also arose between Arjun Kendruka and Nachika Linga over fundraising and prioritizing local issues. While Kenduka was interested in collecting money from big land owners by using terror tactics, Linga emphasized on land and forest issues. Subsequently, other top leaders of the party were divided according to these two factions. The intra-organization factionalism led to the death of some senior leaders.

The intra-organizational rift led to large-scale surrender of cadres in the recent past. More than 2000 members of the CMAS (all of them from different villages of Narayanapatna Block of Koraput district) surrendered by the end of October 2013. In one such event on August 14, 2013, around 87 members of Chasi Mulia Adivasi Sangh (CMAS) of Bargir village under Narayanapatna police station surrendered before the local police. Further, on October 23, at least 50 tribal belonging to the CMAS in Koraput district of Odisha surrendered.

The first ever rally under the CMAS banner was organised on October 10, 2006 demanding registration of land in the names of the tribals and release of ‘their members’ (some of the tribal and local individuals) arrested by the police. There had been reports that the CMAS activists were engaging in violent activities since then. The CMAS activists were said to be also indulging in forceful land grabbing and issuing threats to non-tribal land owners. According to two Maoists who surrendered in early October 2013, they were members of the CMAS and later became cadres of the Srikakulam-Koraput joint divisional committee of the CPI (Maoist). They also disclosed that the CMAS cadres were involved in killing of anti-CMAS tribal leaders.

The CMAS gets support and sympathy from local tribals, who have lost their land due to illegal occupation by non-tribals, CPI-Maoists, CPI (Marxist-Leninist) intellectuals, trade unions and other tribal organizations.

SACM BRIEF:

Islami Jamiat-e-Talaba: Campus Radicals of Pakistan

Islami Jamiat- e- Talaba (IJT), an Islamic student group in Pakistan is in the news recently for all the wrong reasons. On September 11, 2013, Lahore police had arrested one Al Qaeda suspect from the Punjab University campus who was allegedly the mastermind of the suicide attack at the Denmark Embassy in Islamabad in June 2008.

The Punjab University officials indicated subsequently, that political parties and leaders of Punjab have patronized IJT’s activities and allowed the IJT to flourish inside educational institutions. The Al Qaeda member was sheltered by Ahmad Sajjad Rathore of Okara, a senior IJT office bearer, in his hostel room as a guest. Subsequent interrogation and search operations inside the campus resulted in 17 more arrests. All these arrestees are affiliated with IJT and who have links with the Al Qaeda network. The documents recovered from the custody of the arrested Al Qaeda operative also include a list of all the key members of IJT who have links with Punjab University.

In July 2010, journalist Seyed Salim Sehezad wrote in one of his articles for Asia Times ('Pakistani students prefer guns to books', July 27, 2010) that hundreds of students affiliated in Karachi have left the Islami Jamiat-e-Talaba (IJT) and have joined Al Qaeda training camps in the North Waziristan. At that time perhaps the Pakistani authorities did not pay much attention to this piece of vital information. However, investigations confirmed that observation and revealed that Al Qaeda has already made inroads into one of the largest student bodies of Pakistan.

IJT (http://jamiat.org.pk/) was established on December 23, 1947, as a student group loosely affiliated with the Jamaat- e- Islami Pakistan and owes its allegiance to JI’s ideologue Syed Abul-Ala Maududi. The headquarters of Islami Jamiat –e-Talaba is located in the city of Lahore (Punjab), Pakistan. Since its inception, IJT has been active in the different university campuses and educational institutions across Pakistan. Its main stated goal is “To seek the pleasure of Allah (SWT) by ordering human life in accordance with the teachings laid down by Allah and his Messenger Muhammad”. Basically, the Islamic group aims to preach Islam to students of modern educational institutions throughout Pakistan.
There are number of incidents in the past that connect IJT with extremist Islamic groups (e.g. Jundallah) in Pakistan. The June 2004 attack on the motorcade of the Karachi Corps Commander Lt Gen Ahsan Saleem Hayat was masterminded by Jundallah member, Attaur Rehman, a former IJT member. Extremists including Attaur Rehman, his deputy Shahzad Ahmed Bajwa and others were caught from the homes of prominent Jamaat-e Islami local leaders Dr. Akmal Waheed and Dr. Arshad Waheed. The Waheed brothers were arrested in July 2004 in that case (attempt on the life of Saleem Hayat) and sentenced in March 2005 to seven years of imprisonment for their crime.

The recent news of IJT members joining transnational terror groups such as Al Qaeda in hordes is more alarming for Pakistan’s internal security and for the region at large where JI and IJT have enormous ideological influence over other like-minded Islamic student groups in neighboring India and Bangladesh.
